

Lindsay A. Mullineaux, Associate Attorney

Lindsay A. Mullineaux is an Associate Attorney at Laird Cowley with an impressive professional background and knowledge in various aspects of law. She is admitted to practice in Montana State and Federal Courts and is experienced in commercial litigation, construction litigation, employment law and business matters, personal injury litigation, and professional negligence litigation.

Lindsay's formal education is diverse and extensive. She was born and raised in Boulder, Colorado, and attended the University of Colorado - Boulder for her undergraduate degree. There, she graduated magna cum laude with a triple Bachelor of Arts degree in Anthropology, Economics, and English. During this time, she pursued her interest in law through her honors thesis, The Case for DNA: Early DNA Profiling in the Courtroom, in which she examined the controversial emergence of DNA in the legal sector and the ensuing battles over allowing DNA as admissible evidence.

After graduating, Lindsay spent several years working as a technical editor in Denver, Colorado. Later, she moved to Missoula to continue her education. In 2018, she began attending the Alexander Blewett III School of Law in 2018 and was brought on as an intern at Laird Cowley. During law school, she assisted with The Office of the State Public Defender student clinic and worked as a staff member and an executive editor for the Montana Law Review. She graduated with honors in 2021.

Lindsay chose to work at Laird Cowley because she believes it's one of the best places to grow and develop as a young attorney. She appreciates that everyone is treated as an integral part of the team and is given opportunities to engage in important and meaningful work. When not working, Lindsay enjoys spending time hiking and camping in Montana. She loves to cook, ski, spend time with her dogs, and is a lifelong learner of new things.
